Action Alert!

Calls/Letters are needed to Zip-O-Logs urging them to opt out of the Clark timber sale!

CLARK TIMBER SALE REDUCED TO 29 ACRES!!!

NOW YOU CAN BE THE VOICE TO TIP THE SCALES FOR FOREST PROTECTION AT FALL CREEK!!!

In response to a unique combination of direct action, activist surveys, and lawsuits, the US Forest Service, on Jan.22, 2001 issued a report which reduced the Clark Timber Sale, site of the Fall Creek Treesit, from 96 acres to 29 acres! This is an exciting new development. The Clark sale contains some of the last remaining low elevation ancient forests in the Oregon Cascades, and is home to many endangered, rare and sensitive species, including the red tree vole(RTV). Officially, habitat buffers for the RTV are the cause for the reduction of the sale. Of course, how it all got to this point is a much longer and more complicated story.

The campaign to protect Fall Creek/cancel the Clark Sale has been going on for almost 4 years! To date, treesitters are still occupying the forest. This is our 4th winter in the upper canopy. And now, finally- this is the moment we've been waiting for.

WE NEED YOUR HELP.

This reduction in sale volume offers an opportunity for Zip-O Mills (the purchaser) to get out of the sale completely. The USFS has said that it is up to Zip-O if they want to go ahead and log these last few acres or not. So the ball is in their court. It is not very profitable at this point, so economics seem to be on the side of the forest. Zip-O says they are still thinking about what they want to do. So - let's help them think!!!!

Blast Zip-O with calls, letters and faxes. And please get all your friends and members of interested organizations to join in. If we pull together on this one, we can really send a strong message to Zip-O and hopefully tip the scales. Tell Zip-O to tell the Forest Service that this is no longer the sale they purchased, it is not profitable, it's too controversial and most importantly that they want out!!! If you say just one thing, simply urge Zip-O to reject the Clark Sale. Tell them a complete cancellation of the Clark Timber sale is the only thing that will stop the long standing controversy that's surrounded Clark for so many years. By choosing to completely get out of this sale, instead of logging the last few acres which run right up to the newly created habitat areas, they can set an example of the more responsible logging practices that they always claim to be using.

WHO BOMBED JUDI BARI?

FBI Repression of Activists in the '90's

On May 24, 1990, a car bomb exploded beneath environmental and labor activist Judi Bari's car seat as she drove through Oakland, California with fellow activist Darryl Cherney. Judi and Darryl were two prominent organizers for Earth First! Redwood Summer, a campaign of nonviolent logging protests.

For several years before the bombing, Earth First! had spearheaded a growing movement of public protest against the big timber corporations' strip-logging in the redwood region of Northern California. Judi in particular was instrumental in building a coalition of loggers and environmentalists opposed to cut-and-run logging, and in broadening the scope and appeal of the movement. During the month before the bombing, Judi had received a series of written death threats relating to her timber organizing, the worst featuring a photo of her with a rifle scope and cross-hairs superimposed on her face. Shortly afterwards, the bomb exploded in her car.

The bomb nearly killed Judi, and left her permanently disabled and in severe pain for the rest of her life. Darryl escaped with minor injuries. But the terror of the attack did not end there. Within minutes of the blast, the FBI appeared on the scene. In defiance of all the evidence, they had Judi and Darryl arrested for possession of explosives, claiming the two were knowingly transporting the bomb that had been meant to kill them.

These incredible charges were then trumpeted in the national press, with the FBI and Oakland Police (OPD) falsely portraying Judi and Darryl as violent terrorists rather than the targets of a terrorist attack. After eight weeks of public statements villifying the activists by the FBI and OPD, the Alameda County District Attorney declined to press charges for lack of evidence. To this day the FBI and police have conducted no serious investigation of the bombing, and the bombers remain at large.

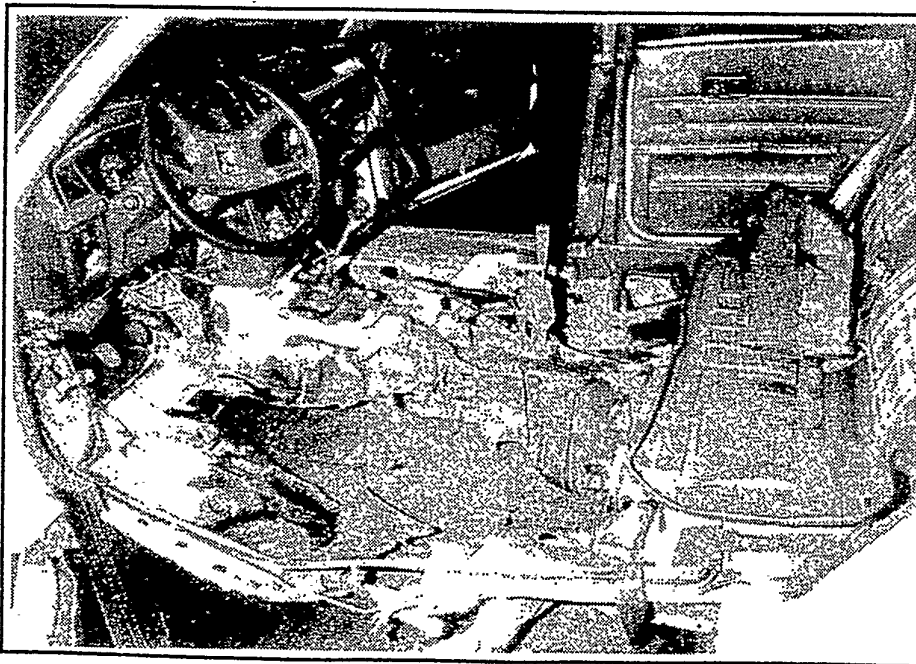

THE CASE AGAINST THE FBI

In 1991, Judi and Darryl filed a Federal civil lawsuit against the FBI and Oakland Police, charging them with false arrest and conspiracy to violate the activists' civil rights. The lawsuit charges that the FBI and police knew perfectly well that Judi and Darryl were innocent, and that they were in fact victims of a brutal assassination attempt. Their false arrest was part of an FBI-driven plan to discredit Earth First! and to "neutralize" Judi and Darryl as organizers.

The case has survived numerous attempts by the FBI and Oakland to have it thrown out and is now headed for trial, possibly as soon as 1999. The courts have repeatedly upheld Judi and Darryl's right to proceed with their charges, including the assertion that the FBI conspired to discredit Earth First!, based on the strength of the evidence released so far.

The most striking evidence is the police's own photos of the bombed-out car. These photos show that the FBI and police knowingly lied when they rushed to arrest Judi and Darryl for the bombing. The arrest was based on the FBI's false claim that the bomb was located on the back seat floorboard when it exploded, and therefore that Judi and Darryl must have seen it and must have known they were carrying it. But the photos, along with the physical evidence and the findings of the FBI's own bomb expert, clearly show that the bomb was actually located directly underneath the driver's seat, and that this was obvious from the damage to the car.

A second cause of arrest listed in the warrant was the FBI's claim that nails taped to the bomb to act as shrapnel were Judi and Darryl were arrested for transporting explosives, based on the FBI's claim that the bomb was located in plain view on the rear seat floorboard. But the police's own photos show that the bomb was hidden under the driver's seat and meant to kill.

"identical" to nails found in a bag in the back of Judi's car. Through the discovery process, the legal team has been able to look at the actual nails and bomb fragments, and at the FBI's lab reports. The nails in the bomb were finishing nails and the nails in the car were roofing nails, two types of nails so different in appearance that no honest observer could have mistaken them as being "identical."

Through the lawsuit we've also learned the exact make-up of the bomb itself. Even in the opinion of the FBI's own expert, the explosion was triggered by a motion device consisting of a large ball bearing that had to roll to connect two contact points. In other words, the bomb was a booby trap, set to explode when the car was driven.

This evidence clearly discredits the FBI's story that Judi and Darryl were knowingly transporting the bomb to use in some kind of sabotage action. Yet even though the FBI and police retrieved pieces of the motion device within hours of the explosion, they never told the press about it, and they disregarded it when they arrested Judi and Darryl on charges of transporting explosives.

Finally, through compelling the FBI to reveal sections of reports that had been illegally blacked-out, we have uncovered another vital piece of information. In the first FBI report from the scene of the Oakland bombing, Special Agent (SA) McKinley notes that, according to another agent, the victims are the "subjects of an investigation by the FBI in the terrorist field." We have never obtained a single document to confirm this claim, or the authorization of such an investigation against Earth First! In fact, every agent and officer to testify in this case has sworn they had never heard of Judi Bari or Darryl Cherney before the bombing. SA McKinley's report and other documents show that, before they had even analyzed one piece of evidence, responding officers at the scene were falsely led by the FBI to believe they were dealing with known terrorists.

BOGUS INVESTIGATION

The fact that Judi and Darryl's arrest was based on such blatant falsehoods shows that this was a deliberate frame-up and not just an error in judgement. The FBI's repressive intentions in this case are also made clear by their refusal to conduct a legitimate search for the bomber. Instead, the 6,000 pages of FBI files released in the lawsuit reveal that the FBI used this case as an excuse to conduct a far-reaching campaign of political intelligence gathering on environmentalists, locally and nationally.

Locally, this surveillance included the FBI searching the letters-to-the-editor files of ten Northern California newspapers and taking letters from environmentalists. The FBI also interviewed small town police from the timber region, management personnel from the timber companies, and members of anti-environmental hate groups from the so-called Wise Use Movement, asking them for names and other information about environmentalists. The investigation went national when the FBI obtained the telephone records of a number of Earth First! activists and compiled a list of 634 out-of-town phone calls they had made in a three-month period around the time of the bombing. FBI agents in 30 cities nationwide then gathered information including names, addresses, physical descriptions, places of employment, criminal records and political associates, about hundreds of people whose only "crime" was to receive a phone call from an Earth First!er.

Despite the use of lethal force and terror against Earth First! organizers, Redwood Summer did go on, drawing thousands of people to the redwood region to protest the corporate liquidation of the forest. Over 2,000 gathered in the streets of Ft. Bragg in July of 1990, an event that became a turning point in the struggle to protect the redwood forest ecosystem.

Meanwhile, the FBI failed to follow up on significant leads that indicate that the bombing was an assassination attempt, plotted in retaliation for Judi and Darryl's organizing activities in the redwoods. One glaring example is their treatment of the written death threats that Judi received right before she was bombed. Although the originals of these threats were turned over to the FBI, they were never investigated or even checked for fingerprints. Thus, firm leads that could have revealed the authors and possibly the bombers were simply ignored.

FBI BOMB SCHOOL

Even more serious questions about the FBI's conduct have been raised by revelations of an FBI "bomb school" held shortly before the attempt on Judi's life.

According to the sworn testimony of Oakland Police and FBI agents and confirmed by the FBI's files, the FBI held a training course for bomb investigators in Eureka, California, in the heart of the redwood region just four weeks before the bomb exploded in Judi's car. During this week-long course, open to law enforcement only, the FBI blew up cars with pipe bombs and practiced responding.

The teacher at bomb school was Special Agent Frank Doyle, the same FBI bomb expert who showed up at the scene in Oakland and supervised the collection of evidence. It is Frank Doyle who is quoted in the warrant falsely stating that the bomb was in the back seat and that nails in the car matched nails in the bomb. In the FBI's own crime scene video, SA Doyle can be heard joking with his cohorts in an apparent reference to bomb school, "This is it! This is the final exam."

At the very least, bomb school set up a line of authority that caused the responding officers to go along with bomb school instructor Frank Doyle when he made false statements about the location of the bomb and matching nails, even though these statements directly contradicted what they saw with their own eyes. At worst, FBI bomb school raises serious questions about the extent of FBI participation in the lead-up to the bombing of Judi Bari, and the possibility of FBI prior knowledge of the attack.

FBI VS. EARTH FIRST!

Contrary to the testimony of the FBI in this case, Earth First! has been well known to the Bureau almost since the day the movement was founded in 1980. The earliest known FBI report on EF! is from 1981, and is just the first of thousands of pages that document the FBI's relentless and illegal attack against the burgeoning radical environmental movement.

Through discovery in the lawsuit, we have forced the San Francisco FBI to turn over their records of the FBI sting operation against Arizona Earth First! from

Richard W. Held, Special Agent in Charge (SAC) of the San Francisco FBI office at the time of the bombing. For more information about Held and his notorious involvement with FBI CONTELPRO, read the leaflet "America's Secret Police," available from the Redwood Summer Justice Project. Photo by Scott Sommerdorf of the SF Chronicle

1988-1990, just prior to the bombing of Judi and Darryl. The operation, code-named THERMCON, was an effort to discredit Earth First! co-founder Dave Foreman and Arizona EF! by associating the group with explosives. They infiltrated the Arizona EF! group with agent provocateurs, won the trust of a small group of activists over a period of two years, and tried unsuccessfully to convince them to use explosives to take down a power line.

Unable to convince the activists to use explosives, the FBI had to settle for getting them to cut down the power pole with an acetylene torch. Even then, FBI agents bought the tools, taught the activists how to use them, chose the site, drove the activists there and, of course, busted them in the act. In short, Operation THERMCON did not consist of the FBI infiltrating EF! to break up a thermite conspiracy. It consisted of the FBI using provocateurs to infiltrate EF! and try to create a bombing conspiracy for them to bust. It is in the context of this attempt to link Earth First! with explosives that the FBI terrorist squad moved in after the bombing of Judi Bari and Darryl Cherney in Oakland and arrested them as bombers.

The strangest part of the San Francisco FBI's THERMCON file is not what is there, but what is missing. Along with a document that appears to show the FBI meeting weekly with an informant in

Northern California in March of 1990, there is a page that simply reads: "[Documents numbered] 141-159 were missing from the file when it was processed." There are no dates, initials, or other indications to explain where this page came from, or why the missing files were removed. The next document in the file is from June 1990, one month after Judi and Darryl were bombed. We believe these files, obviously reflecting illicit FBI surveillance in Northern California in the weeks and days leading up to the bombing, were too hot to handle and had to be "disappeared." Apparently the FBI would rather be caught in an overt cover-up than to reveal what it is they are hiding. How the FBI will explain "losing" such key documents remains to be seen.

BROADER IMPLICATIONS

After the bombing in 1990, despite all efforts to terrorize and discredit the organizers, Redwood Summer went on as planned. Three thousand people came to the redwood region from all over the country and engaged in nonviolent demonstrations. In an incredibly volatile situation, Earth First! in Northern California responded to hatred and violence with principle and nonviolence. In the years since Redwood Summer, the Earth First! movement in the redwood region has grown to include thousands more, people who have added their bodies and their voices to the struggle to save the redwoods in Headwaters Forest, Albion, and other threatened areas. Thanks largely to the determination and courage of Judi Bari to stand up to lethal force with humor and nonviolence, the FBI did not succeed in destroying Earth First!'s effective organizing in defense of the redwood forest.

Of course, the stigma attached to Judi, Darryl and Earth First! from the bombing still prejudices the view of people far and wide who have not heard the true story. In pursuing their lawsuit against the FBI, Judi and Darryl seek exoneration from the false charges, as well as information to solve the bombing and expose the gross misconduct of America's secret police.

VIVA JUDI BARI!

Tragically, on March 2, 1997, breast cancer took Judi Bari's life. She is sorely and lovingly missed by her friends and comrades. Judi worked compiling evidence for the civil rights lawsuit until just days before her death. She knew that the case was about much more than herself or Earth First! The FBI must be challenged, not just for the sake of individual justice, but to ensure the safety and rights of all progressive activists. The bombing of Judi Bari, and the blatant and well-documented counterintelligence operation against Earth First! that followed, give us an unprecedented opportunity. We must take the FBI to task and expose their covert reign of terror against social justice activists that has characterized the agency's entire existence and continues to this day.

CASCADIA MEDIA COLLECTIVE

Guerrilla videographers provide the world with uncensored footage of political demonstrations such as the Quebec City mobilization against the Free Trade Area of the Americas in April 2001.

Introduction

You are the Media

That's right, you are the media. As soon as you pick up a camera and start recording, you become media. You don't need a journalism degree or a pedigree of any kind.

There are numerous reasons to be dissatisfied with the coverage offered by mainstream news. Entire fields of communications research have evolved around the fallacies of mass media produced within the capitalist system. But on a more practical level, the mainstream media's cameras can't be everywhere, and even when they are on the scene for a spot news event, they provide sparse, shallowly-edited coverage wedged between sports, weather and commercials. While you might not have a big budget or fancy equipment or a eyewitness news logo-tagged sport utility vehicle to parade around in, you have every right to be on the streets providing the public with your independently-produced media. And you have a right to stand your ground when confronted by state coercion against your grassroots journalism efforts.

Many examples could be cited to illustrate the power of street-level video to make a serious difference. An "amateur" videographer captured Los Angeles police officers in the midst of a vicious assault on motorist Rodney King, which injected the reality of police violence back into the mass mind of Amerika. During the mobilization against the World Trade Organization in Seattle in November 1999, independent videographers played a key role in documenting evidence of mass police violence against demonstrators, while preserving the spirit of that historic day when street demonstrators brought the machinations of global trade policy to a grinding halt. The world—even the corporate media—relies on independent videographers, street journalists and ordinary people with cameras who happen to be in the right place at the right time.

If you are ready to get serious about your efforts to produce media for social change, the Guerrilla Video Primer will provide an overview of everything you need to know about documenting protests, mass demonstrations, Copwatch, and more. Beyond this context, these techniques can be adapted to virtually every situation you will encounter. We'll start off by reviewing some of the equipment you'll need. Then we'll move into the basics of operating the camera and editing your footage.

Equipment

The camera is your most important equipment choice. Three types of camcorders are commonly available from a variety of manufacturers: 8mm, Hi-8, and DV (Digital Video).

The 8mm format is the most inexpensive video camera, with prices ranging from under $100 to around $300. The tapes are also relatively inexpensive and run for 2 hours. However, 8mm footage lacks the picture clarity and quality of Hi-8 and DV cameras. If you are on a tight budget or don't have any other equipment available, an 8mm camera is adequate and can accomplish the task of getting the "shot."

Hi-8 is a higher-quality 8mm format, providing your footage with greater clarity, color and brightness. Hi-8 camera prices range from $200 to around $500. Hi-8 videotapes cost about twice as much as regular 8mm tapes, but if good picture quality is an important factor to you, you'll be glad you invested the extra resources in Hi-8.

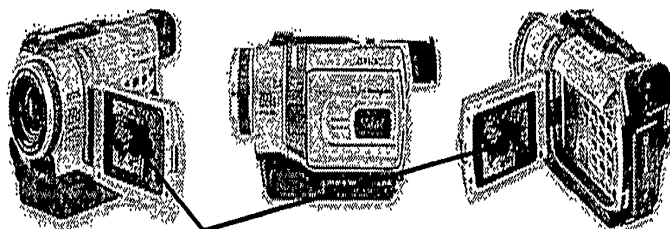

DV (Digital Video) is the newest and most expensive format of video camera available to the common person. DV cameras produce very high quality footage relative to the cost of the camera, which ranges from around $350 to more than $1,200, depending on which camera you choose. Although some DV camcorders record footage on disk (we don't recommend this type of DV camera for everyday use), most DV cameras record onto Hi-8 tapes. However, because the camera is digitally encoding lots of electronic information onto the tape, the tape has to be run twice as fast to adequately capture all the data. Therefore, each Hi-8 tape will only get you one hour of footage, effectively doubling your tape costs. (You can reduce your tape costs by shooting your footage with the "editing eye," which is a topic that we'll discuss later in this booklet.) If you just need an inexpensive camera for covering Copwatch patrols, a simple 8mm camera might work great, but if you intend to start producing high-quality video projects using the best possible source footage, DV is definitely the format you want.

DV cameras can upload video footage to a computer via the "Firewire" interface, which is an invaluable capability if you are planning to use non-linear digital editing software. With DV, Firewire, and a fast computer, editing your video projects can be nearly as easy as cutting and pasting text in a word processor.

Beyond the recording format of the camera, other hardware considerations come into play. Many newer cameras have an adjustable 2"-3" pop-out LCD monitor window, providing a "what you see is what you get" view of what your camera is recording. The pop-out monitor also offers increased mobility, freeing you from staring through the viewfinder to get a steady shot. Even if you are holding the camera high above your head on a tripod, you can be sure that you are getting a steady shot by using the camera's pop-out window.

Another fairly recent hardware innovation is the Night Vision feature on many cameras. If your camera has Night Vision, you can film even in total darkness, as long as the subject you are filming is within range. The footage will have a weird green monochrome tint, but you'll be able to get the shot with a surprising level of detail and picture quality.

A pop-out LCD monitor is a useful camera feature.

For good leads on equipment sources, see your local video shop's magazine rack, or do a few Internet searches. Auction sites like Ebay and half.com have endless lists of used and "like new" camcorder equipment for sale at heavily-discounted prices.

The Battery

Your camera is important, but without a battery it is useless. Most video cameras come with a 90-minute battery; keep that one handy and fully charged as an emergency spare battery. Your primary battery should have an 8-12 hour capacity, which falls in a price range from $50 to around $100. Get the biggest battery you can afford. An 8-hour battery will get you through a long day of shooting; a 12-hour battery will get you through the night.

External Microphone

One of the most common problems with street-level footage is the sound quality. Many camcorders have fairly decent microphones built in that will be suitable for most purposes if used appropriately. However, for uses such as conducting interviews or recording musicians, a high-quality external microphone can be desirable and in some cases is indispensable.

Two types of microphones come in handy on the street: "omni" and "directional." As the name implies, omni microphones record all sound that is in range, regardless of the sound source's position relative to the microphone. This type of microphone is perfect for recording street scenes, riots and other fun. Directional microphones, on the other hand, only record sound that is more or less directly in front of the microphone. If you are recording an interview with someone, you'll want to use a directional mike, which will record the subject's voice and ignore whatever noise is going on around you.

Using a microphone and filming simultaneously is much easier if you mount the microphone on the camera using a mike "shoe." This fixture leaves your hands free to operate the camera while allowing you to easily remove the microphone from its mount if needed.

Lenses

Camera lenses can greatly extend the uses of your camcorder. For around $40 to $70, you can obtain a decent-quality wide-angle lens, which provides a wider field of view than the camera's built-in lens. A wide-angle lens is a great camera accessory for recording scenes close-up, when you want to get as much of the scene in the frame as possible.

A telephoto lens is good for getting a close-up shot of a distant subject, but most cameras have varying levels of macro zoom built in. You may find an additional telephoto lens to be useful, but for most purposes you may find your camera's built-in zoom to be adequate.

Tapes

We've already covered the pros and cons of tape formats in the "camera" section. However, there are a few finer points to discuss. In an emergency, you can actually use a regular 8mm tape in a DV camcorder. But by doing so, you run the risk of "dropping frames" (jumpy breaks in the video) and audio dropouts (noise or silent spots). Also, if you use an 8mm tape in a DV camcorder, you won't be able to use the all-important tape counter which tells you in minutes, seconds and frames where you are at any point in the tape. Whenever possible, use Hi-8 tapes with DV cameras for best results. But if you're on a really tight budget, 8mm tapes will do.

Group Equipment Dynamic

If your media projects are undertaken with another person or as part of a collective effort, consider the advantage of acquiring interchangeable equipment (cameras, batteries, tapes, etc.) for mutual support. In this way, it is not necessary for every person to have every piece of equipment needed for robust media coverage; microphones, lenses and other accessories can be shared among the group. This is a great way to effectively reduce equipment expenses.

Prep Checklist

Before embarking, be sure you have:

Equipment

- extra tapes (pre-labeled, ready to roll)
- extra battery (check all batteries for full charge)
- some sort of rain protection for equipment
- notebook and pens
- communications equipment (cell phones, two-way radios)
- first aid kit
- food & water

Clothing

Dress in layers and wear clothing that won't restrict movement or slow you down.

- good shoes
- long-sleeved shirt
- hat/head cover (vital winter gear; also provided protection from police chemical weapons)
- gas masks (not the ones with glass eye-pieces), goggles or paint masks

Game Plan

- Whether you are going solo or as part of a team, have a plan for covering the event. Have maps on hand; plan your routes; arrange transportation ahead of time; be aware of the weather forecast.

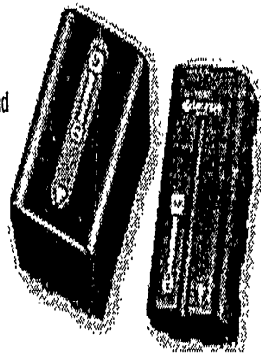

Shot Check List

Plan out what shots you will want before going into the field (to the extent possible). Include multiple takes of same shot from several different angles. You may want three or four shots to choose from when editing. Additional takes of the same shot should only be done if they are extra-special. Instead of shooting repetitious footage of the same thing, focus on the shots on your list that you have not gotten yet.

Phone Numbers and Jail Support Numbers

If you should get arrested during your efforts as a videographer (and yes, this does happen), you don't want to just disappear into the system. Always tell someone you trust where you will be and what you will be doing when going out to film a demonstration. This personal contact will guarantee that you will have outside support if you are put in jail. The group holding the demonstration might also distribute a jail support phone number. If someone tries to write it on your arm with a marker, let them, it's a good number to have.

Check to make sure your primary and back-up batteries are fully charged.

Camera Basics

Steady Shooting

The most common complaint about so-called "amateur" video is that the footage isn't steady. Steady shots demonstrate intent and purpose, whereas shaky footage makes it difficult for the viewer to follow what is going on. Your final edited project needs a good balance of steady shots or the viewer will find it jarring and difficult to watch. Some people even get motion sickness when watching shaky footage.

Steady shots add contrast and tension to chaotic non-steady shots, such as arrest scenes, riots, and so forth. Wild shots gotten in the midst of chaos can be useful, but they should portray wild scenes, not calm ones.

Movement can be created during editing process. Don't swing the camera around frantically trying to capture everything at once. Instead, create a sequence of steady shots to draw from during editing.

Handling the Camera

The key to getting a steady shot with a handheld camcorder is to properly hold the camera. Your arm should be extended from your chest and/or supported by a nearby object. Position your feet so that you are balanced but able to start moving smoothly if necessary. Use your free hand to support the camera from underneath with your palm up. (Holding a hand towel underneath the camera can help absorb jolts and bumps.) Breathe calmly and steadily, and don't get out of breath in a hectic situation.

Techniques for Steady Shooting

More than anything, steady shooting requires practice. But there are a few tips and tricks that might help.

- Frame a point in a corner of the camera's viewfinder to maintain a steady position. If the tripod post that you've chosen as your "steady point" is moving around the corner of the viewfinder like a buzzing fly, then you need to maintain a steadier shot.

- Stay focused. Don't drift off during long shots.

- Keep both eyes open while filming. This might not come naturally, but it allows you to see what the camera's getting through the viewfinder and what's going on outside of the viewfinder at the same time.

- Zooming in shakes up the shot. Stay wide if possible.

- Improvised tripods are a great way to hold a steady shot. Car hoods, knees and fences suit this purpose nicely. Or you can come prepared with a mini-tripod or monopod.

Pan Techniques

A smooth panning shot can really bring a scene to life. When filming a panning shot, make sure your feet are facing the final resting spot of the turn, and pre-designate your ending point. When possible, practice the pan a few times before filming to get it down.

Exposure Issues

Your camera's shutter setting controls the amount of light that enters the lens, thus controlling the exposure. If too much light enters the lens, the footage will be overexposed, resulting in bleached-out footage with washed-out detail and color. Anything that isn't dark is likely not to show up on overexposed film. At the other extreme, if the exposure is set too low, too little light will enter the lens, and the footage will be dark and muddy. Dark objects tend to disappear completely in the shadows of underexposed footage.

Thus, exposure is one of the most important and least considered aspects of camerawork. It is also one of the most notorious culprits in ruining otherwise good video footage. There are a few ground rules that will help you avoid exposure problems.

- Never trust the camera's auto exposure. The camera is a machine and can't account for everything.

- Beware of bleach-out. If the camera's viewfinder shows white patches with little or no detail, this probably indicates that the footage is overexposed. To fix this, adjust the exposure until you see color and detail.

- Darkness is a common problem when you're in the shadow of the subject that your exposure is set for.

- Filming in a fluctuating light environment demands careful attention and has to be dealt with at all times. Practice keeping a thumb on the camera's exposure dial while filming so that you're ready to adjust the shutter at any time. (If your camera's exposure dial also controls other camera functions, make sure the dial is set to exposure control while you're shooting. This is a common mistake even among advanced videographers.)

- Light fluctuation danger zones, such as marches that are moving between tall buildings, require you to pay constant attention to maintaining proper camera exposure.

Focus

Blurry footage and a quarter won't get you uptown. Keep your camera on auto focus unless auto can't do the job. (It usually can.) There are special cases in which you'll want to use manual focus, such as shifting focus from an object in the background to an object in the foreground. Occasionally, you may need to manually adjust your focus while zooming to keep a sharp image. If you have time to manually adjust your focus, you can get a crisper image, but only with a non-moving or slowly-moving subject.

Zooming In: Do's & Don'ts

ZOOM DO's:

- Zoom in if it adds information or more emphasis to the shot.

- The zoom should start and finish smoothly.

- Be conscious of the timing of the zoom; not too slow, not too fast.

- The zoom can be used to "crop" the scene. By zooming in a bit, you can improve the composition of your shot or remove unwanted details. For example, if you are filming through a chain-link fence, you can zoom in a bit to get the fence out of the shot.

- Be aware of focus shift; you may need to focus while zooming.

- Go wide after every shot so that the lens is already set to its widest when you start the next shot. If you start your next shot while you're still zoomed in, it's easy to miss your shot while going wide trying to find the action. You might not get a good shot if something happens quick.

To effectively deal with problematic light environments, learn to quickly adjust your camera's exposure setting.

ZOOM DON'TS:

- Don't overuse the zoom (a common beginner mistake).
- Don't do it just because you can (another common beginner mistake).
- Don't zoom in during an intense scene. When in a crisis, stay wide to get as much as possible in the frame. You might miss something important if you are zooming in while things are moving fast.

Still Shot Sequences

This is a composition technique that lets you create a picture story with a beginning, middle and end right there on the spot. A still shot sequence may consist of a far-away shot, a nearby shot, and a close-up shot of a scene or an object. Or you might do a still pan, getting a shot at stage right, center and stage left. Different details from a scene can show a story developing.

The 5-second Rule

This is a technique for thinking like an editor while you're in the field. It also helps conserve tape and battery power. Essentially, you should try to keep the length of your shots down to about 5-8 seconds plus a few seconds at each end to give slack for editing. Long, boring shots are a common beginner mistake. Don't just stand around shooting stationary riot cops for half an hour; get a few quick shots and either move on or wait for something to happen. If you stay with the shot, have a reason to keep shooting. Don't waste tape if there's nothing going on. The more "deadwood" your footage contains, the longer the editing process will take as you rewind and fast-forward around these chunks of useless videotape.

Slow Sign Reading Trick

This is a good technique for timing out how long to hold on a still shot such as a sign so that viewer has time to read and understand the sign. This provides a good establishing shot when opening a video segment.

- Get a tight, well-composed shot so the sign is easy to read.
- Pause for a few seconds, move, pause another few seconds.
- A wide-angle lens can be very useful for this type of shot.

Smooth Walk Thrus

You may want to film while walking alongside a march or through an area. The same advice from the "steady shooting" section applies here, with the added dimension of physical camera motion.

- Minimize up-and-down movement when walking (or running).
- Keep your balance. Wake steady strides when walking, and keep your feet close to the ground (don't raise your feet any higher than necessary when moving).
- Be aware of obstacles such as poles, trees, other people, cars, and so forth. Keep both eyes open and plan your route as you move.
- When you are walking backwards, have an assistant guide you if possible.
- You don't always have to be looking through the viewfinder while shooting. Sometimes it's easier to get a steady shot while moving if you hold the camera steadily but freely without using the viewfinder. A pop-out monitor window (discussed in the "camera" section) makes this a lot easier.
- Don't become an obstruction to the event while trying to get a shot.

lish" the scene and help provide an overview, giving the viewer a context of what is going on.

- Call-and-response shots. With call-and-response shots, the first shot sets up second shot, and second shot answers first shot. One example would be a shot of a riot cop's glove bearing a Nike logo, followed by a shot of riot police protecting a Nike storefront from demonstrators.

Practice Shooting

If you are already comfortable with the camera before going into the field, you will get better footage. Practice using zoom; switching from auto to manual focus and focusing on the fly; and changing exposure settings while shooting.

Practice shooting while holding the camera above your head with or without using the pop-out monitor window. If you don't have a pop-up window, practice and then watch footage to get a feel for where your lens is pointed when you're not looking through the viewfinder. (Always stay wide when shooting over the head if you don't have a pop-out window.)

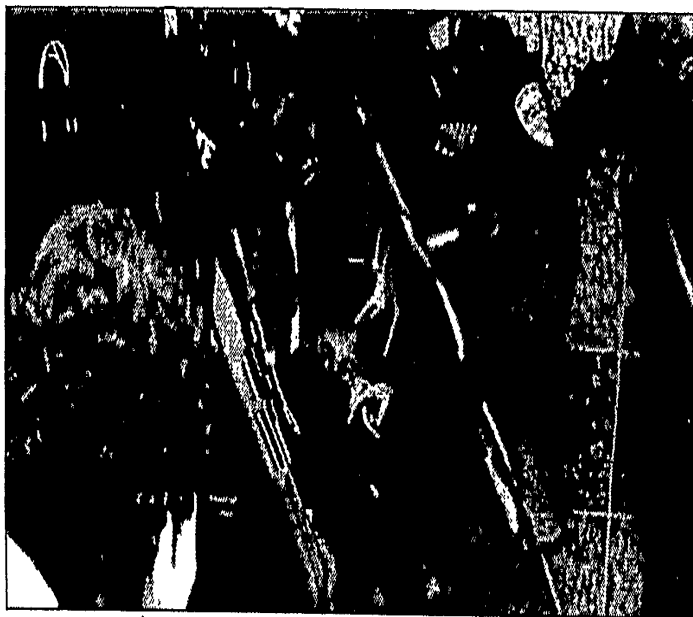

Also practice running forward — and graceful retreats. Your shoulders are like your shock absorbers; use them to absorb motion, keeping the arm steady. Try to breathe smoothly; don't run out of breath. When you stop running, try to be more conscious of holding a steady shot, because you'll be more prone to move.

Your practice sessions provide a good opportunity to check out the settings for your record button. The touch off/on feature, which sets the camera to only tape when the record button is pressed in, has a quicker start and eliminates the risk of "ground shooting." However, touch off/on isn't as good for prolonged shots because your thumb will get sore from holding the button down. The click off/on feature is more comfortable for longer shots but requires a few seconds of lag time, so it isn't as quick on the draw.

The Editing Eye

The "editing eye" involves thinking like a video editor while you're in the field with your camera. It requires being aware of certain types of shots that an editor would want to have during the editing process. These shots include:

- Transitional shots. These are interesting, expressive, usually random shots that may be very short in length. Transitional shots are often more artistic and allow more opportunities for visual expression than the standard cut-and-dried news shots. You'll need more of these stories than you might expect to create an entire story. Think of transitions as the mortar between the bricks of your final edited piece.
- Establishing shots. These shots "estab-

Keep Steady: When all hell breaks loose, stay calm and focus on getting a solid, steady, wide shot of the action.

Documenting a Crisis

In a crisis situation, such as a melee or a mass arrest, it is more important than ever to keep it together and get good footage.

- Keep the camera wide even if you're not shooting yet.
- Always have an escape route during a crisis.

- Establish rendezvous points and times with your team.

- Pay attention to what's going on beyond the camera. Check out the scene behind you and ask people what they know is going on behind you.

- Keep the camera steady.

Cop Watch

"Cop Watch" is one of the most vital roles you can perform as a street-level media watchdog. Your presence with a camera might spare someone harassment, physical abuse and/or violations of human rights.

Know Your Local Laws

Cops will lie to you about the law on the spot. You need to be informed beforehand to hold your ground. In the state of Oregon, where the Cascadia Media Collective usually operates, the law clearly states that anyone handing out a flyer is considered to be media. However, different laws may be imposed in your area.

Also be aware of the finer points of police semantics. There is a difference between police orders and police requests. To discern between them, learn your local laws using your local city library, university law library or the Internet.

Keep the Tape Running

Always keep the camera rolling during interactions with the cops. This footage is your own back-up evidence in case it should become necessary. In Oregon, it's not illegal to tape the police; it's only illegal to secretly tape the police, and it is a lie if they tell you otherwise (which they often do).

Demand Media Rights

Never assume a lesser-status role than corporate media at an event. You have the same rights as corporate media reporters, but you may have to assert those rights on the street.

Stay Calm

Don't become part of the event. When shit gets hectic, it can be easy to get swept into the fray and "spaz out" when the adrenaline starts pumping. But it's more important to stay locked in, record the footage and get it out for the record.

Ride the "Orders Line"

It is important to be assertive rather than passive towards the police, especially in situations where there is a possibility of police violence. After several years of tense encounters with the police, Cascadia videographers have been able to define their space for covering the police, at the expense of numerous arrests and citations (many of which were dismissed in court).

- There is no obligation to obey an illegal command. Have the orders clearly stated and backed up by laws. If you are arrested for disobeying an illegal command, at least you stood your ground, and you will have a strong case in court.

- Use the "buddy system." If the police start harassing a partner or a team member, you can document it with your camera, and vice-versa. This is a powerful deterrent to further incidents of harassment.

Interview the Cop PR Lackey

The police often designate a spokesperson specifically for an event, and police departments designate spokespeople who are often public relations professionals who are quite efficient and eloquent when it comes to lying and looking clean. This person will have the "official" side of the story, which is often useful when contrasted to the reality that you will document on the streets. Interviews with the cop PR lackey also provide opportunities to hit the police with the heavy questions that the mainstream media won't touch. This is another time when you may need to assert your status as media.

Interview Witnesses as Soon as Possible

Witness recollections are clearer, more accurate, more detailed and more in synch with each other immediately after an incident or event. These interviews can provide valuable evidence for court proceedings.

Document the Scene

By locking the cops into having to back up their reports in court (which are almost always lies), you may help someone innocent go free. Don't underestimate the smallest detail — a street sign, crowd numbers, cop numbers, crowd demeanor, specific cop instructions, clear dialogues — all of which have led to dismissed charges in court.

Other Documentation

Have Copwatch eyewitness forms on hand to distribute to witnesses, along with contact cards for yourself or your local Copwatch group or office.

When Cops Attack: Stay calm and shoot good footage for the record.

Covering a Local Event

Now we'll cover a few applications of the advice given previously, as we delve into actual news coverage of an event in your neighborhood, town or region.

First Shots

The first shots you will probably get will be set-up shots (banners, signs, costumes, cops, crowds and so forth). These are good shots to get warmed up with. Film these shots from a couple of different angles. This is the time to be as arty as you want — when the shit hits the fan, stay basic. Use the 5-second rule; you will get a lot but use little tape and battery.

Barrow Interviews

When corporate media interview the mayor, jump in. Ask your own questions, and don't stop taping.

Move Around

Don't stand still, especially during marches and speeches. If another crew member is on audio, always try to shoot a few different angles of the same stuff.

Avoid Repetition

Getting 10 identical shots of the same subject gives you no choice at all during editing, so don't waste tape and batteries.

Pay Attention

Getting good shots is not a random activity. Events are like movies with beginnings, middles and ends, with climaxes and resolutions, tension and release. You will need to tell a story with your footage — be aware of this and tape accordingly. Later on during the editing process, the shots that you could have had but didn't get will drive you nuts.

Some basic cues: when cops arrive; when more cops arrive; every time they do something new like new formations or put on gas masks; retreats are a bonus. When a march turns a corner, be there before it happens; when a speaker is preparing to speak, be on the spot ready to go so you don't miss the opening.

Do Your Research Beforehand

Understand the event that you plan to cover. Is it a march? A rally? A march following a rally? You need to know to pre-plan and bring the right equipment.

Covering a National Event

Everything mentioned in the "covering a local event" section also applies here.

More Emphasis on a Plan

National events often involve huge marches, massive lock-downs and other large-scale action. Be sure to get a schedule of the event and plan out your day accordingly. Network with other people beforehand.

• Have your jail support straight. Always prepare for the worst and have jail support numbers and contingency plans clearly arranged. Even corporate media reporters get swept up in mass arrests. Also, decide whether or not you plan to participate in jail solidarity in such a situation.

• Establish rendezvous points and reorganizing plans with your team or buddy.

• Make sure you have with you a map of the city, a bus route schedule, and your contact phone numbers.

• Check and re-check to verify that you have plenty of tape and battery (be prepared to go all day) and make food and water preparations.

Exchange Contact Info with other videographers you meet on the street. You might want to share footage of the event later, and this may be your only opportunity to exchange contact info. It's good to have a card of some sort ready to hand out to people that you meet, even if it's just a piece of paper with handwritten contact info. A printed card is nice, but there's no need for anything fancy.

Camera Teams

We've already mentioned some of the benefits of working together as a team or crew. A team of people can do a lot more than an individual, especially when covering large national-scale events.

The Runner

A "runner" is a crew member who has been specifically designated to run tape out of a dangerous area if needed. Police have been known to confiscate video footage as "evidence" and then conveniently lose the tapes. They've also been known to tape over confiscated footage before returning it. Sometimes the police will severely delay the release of tapes seized as evidence, thus delaying your ability to get your footage out to the world. It's good to have a preselected drop-off spot for the runner.

Assistant

An assistant provides a second pair of eyes, which is good for spotting shots, keeping an eye on the cops, talking with other people to get info, setting up interviews, and looking for possible escape routes.

Interviewer

The interviewer asks people questions, gets info, and gives commentary. This is a good job for a "people person." The interviewer frees the cameraperson to focus on getting a steady, centered shot of the subject.

Multiple Cameras

If your team has more than one camera available, you can add great deal of depth to your documentation of a specific event by working as a well-coordinated squad.

• Two Cameras: A two-camera team should stay across the street from each other, with each camera providing 180 degrees of coverage. When covering parades, have one camera cover the front and one in back.

• More Than Two Cameras: Use the same tactics as you would with two cameras, but create a camera grid to maximize coverage of the event.

• Don't Stand Side by Side: This eliminates the benefit of having multiple cameras.

Covering News Stories

When the mainstream media fails to get the story — as they so often do — you can step in and get the scoop.

Interview People

- Have good questions ready. People like specific questions and usually don't feel comfortable with vague questions.

- Get the important information about the event or incident (who, what, where, when, and why).

- Pick a varied range of people to interview. Don't exclude people based on your preconceptions about whether or not they might have something interesting to say. As a media producer, your choices determine what your audience will see. Take this responsibility seriously.

- Try to anticipate the questions that your audience will want to have answered. Remember that you are presenting an event to someone who wasn't there.

If It's a Noun, Get Footage

Get shots of everything mentioned in your interviews. Also be sure to get plenty of good set-up shots.

Interview witnesses as soon as possible after an event or incident, when memories are still fresh and clear.

Documenting Evidence

Police/state assaults on people's human rights must be documented as meticulously as possible. These guidelines are applicable to many other situations as well.

- Document the scene. Answer the "who, what, when, where and why" questions. Record interviews with witnesses as soon after the event as possible.

- Make your footage available to those involved in the incident. This is another good reason to have a card with contact info ready to hand out.

- Get good details of the cops. Videotape car numbers, names on badges and badge numbers, and anything else you can get. These details will help catch them lying in court.

- Get good audio of police orders.

- Record the date and time. The date and time are always encoded on digital cameras, but not on analog cameras.

- Everything in the "Cop Watch" section applies here as well.

Respect Your Subject

In the present climate of police intimidation, many people at demonstrations aren't comfortable being videotaped. Be sensitive to people's desire to protect their identities. You should always respect someone's anonymity, just as you would respect that person's freedom to be in the streets. Don't get in anyone's face, and especially don't fixate on a masked person (unless you want a lens full of spray paint). Respect camera-free zones and "safe" spaces.

- Tape "heavy" stuff from behind. Don't go out of your way to incriminate someone with your footage, which could end up in the hands of the police if you are arrested. Don't let your desire to get a cool shot of a direct action lead to someone's imprisonment due to your presence with a camera.

- Only tape as with implied consent.

- When corporate media reporters are taping the event, loosen up your privacy standards. Be sure you also document whatever the corporate media gets to prevent misinformation and misrepresentation. The corporate media will show the worst of the worst over and over for the sake of sensationalism. You can at least provide context and present the event accurately. If you have the only camera around, you should show more restraint in documenting actions in a way that could endanger the subject(s).

Tape "heavy" stuff from behind.

- Introduce yourself if you are covering a group that you are unfamiliar with (and get out those ever-handly contact cards). Strangers with video cameras can make people nervous.

Audio

Audio quality can make or break a news report, video segment or documentary project.

- Always point your microphone towards the subject. Moving the mike away can cause dips in the audio signal.

- Beware of audio hazards. Double- and triple-check your equipment to avoid these problems:

- Make sure that the microphone is turned on if it has an on/off switch.

- Watch out for loose mike cords.

- Don't use weak mike batteries. Check the charge beforehand.

- Minimize any loud noises in the background (traffic, machinery, etc.) by positioning your subject and the microphone away from the interference.

— If your camera features tape playback with audio, you can record a microphone test and replay it to be absolutely sure that everything is functioning.

Beware of audio hazards. Audio quality can make or break a video project.

Editing

Video editing, including non-linear digital editing, will be covered in greater detail in the final release of this manual, and in the Guerrilla Video Primer videotape (see back page).

Basic Camera-to-VCR and VCR-to-VCR Editing

The simplest editing method is the "boxcar technique." This is basic linear editing, in which you line up clips back-to-back as you go along. The boxcar technique requires planning; you will rely on sticking to carefully selected "in" and "out" points.

- Uneven audio between different segments can seem distracting or rough, so don't cut into the middle of a voice or noise unless you can't avoid it.

- Use the VCR's frame-to-frame feature to set precise entry points for cuts. Nudge the VCR's play head forward by pausing the tape just before the segment you want to use, then tapping the pause button to advance the tape frame by frame. When you have the tape advance to the point where you want to cut in, hit the record button while pause is still activated, and the VCR should set itself to start recording at that point.

- Watch out for the VCR's time delay; start recording a half second early to avoid trimming off the start point. This is a special skill developed through practice.

General Editing Advice

- Shorter is usually better. Remember the 5-second rule. Long, repetitive shots get boring, diluting the effectiveness of the edited piece.

- Frequent audio cuts can make a video hard to watch, but frequent video cuts over a single audio track (such as a speech or music) can flow smoothly. This is a good way to compress a lot of footage into a short amount of running time without disrupting the audio.

- For interviews, a good exit point is better than a rambling conclusion.

- It's good to have plenty of footage to illustrate a narrative (remember, if it's a noun, you want it.)

- Careful logging of raw footage is the key to efficient editing. Watch through the footage, noting the start and stop times of each shot on a sheet of paper, with a brief description of the shot. If you are a hardcore tech head, you might even set up a database for tracking this information.

Distribution and Uses

Once you've shot your footage, what do you do with it? You probably have plenty of ideas already in mind, but consider the following possibilities if you haven't already.

- Forming or joining a video collective is a great way to provide your local community with a steady supply of independent media coverage. Pool your efforts and resources with people who are already doing it or who are interested in doing it.

- Public access television is an excellent way to get your video projects on the air, whether they are one-shots or regularly scheduled programs. Check with your local cable access TV station for details on how you should prepare your program's tape for broadcast. You might even inquire about the possibility of putting on a live show like Cascadia Alive! (see www.cascadiamedia.org/cascadiaalive.html).

- Exchange your projects with other video groups to widen your audience and help build the grassroots media networks that we will need to overcome the corporate media's monopoly on news. A list of independent and radical video collectives is posted at www.cascadiamedia.org.

- Distribute your projects to infoshops and places that regularly hold video screenings for the public. A list of infoshops is available at www.infoshop.org.

- Distribute your media on the Internet. Full-frame video is too bandwidth-intensive for the Internet to be used as a practical distribution medium at this time. However, your footage can provide audio clips, video stills and even compressed video clips at reduced frame size. The rapidly-proliferating Indymedia network (www.indymedia.org) provides the activist public with a robust Internet forum for posting photographs, audio and video clips, video stills and written text reports.

This concludes the pre-release version of the Guerrilla Video Primer manual. As a purchaser of this pre-release copy, you are entitled to a $2 discount off the cost of one copy of the Guerrilla Video Primer videotape. See the back page for details. The march left Tyree moving south on Blair, west on 5th, south on Polk, east on W. Broadway, and south on Van Buren. At the intersection of 11th and Van Buren, the participants burned an American Flag and a picture of Jesus.

The march then proceeded south on Van Buren and then west on 13th. The march stopped at the Marine Corps Reserves center. The participants lowered the Marine Corps flag using the ropes on the flag pole. The participants tried to burn the flag, but were unsuccessful because of the rain. INITIAL INFORMATION BY [REDACTED]

On January 19, 2004, at approximately 0930 hours, I was dispatched to (G&J Auto Sales) 300 NW 2nd Street in reference to Vandalism. Upon arrival, I met the complainant, [REDACTED] said someone scratched the words "ELF" on two of the vehicles on the lot. [REDACTED] showed me the vehicles. The first one was a red 1999 Ford F-350 Lariat Super Duty 4x4 and it had the letters "ELF" scratched on the passenger's side door. The second one was a green 1996 Ford F-150 Eddie Bauer and it had the letters "ELF" scratched on the driver's side bed of the truck.

[REDACTED] told him about the damage on Saturday January 17th. [REDACTED] said he does not know of anyone who could have damaged the vehicles and this was the first time someone had scratched "ELF" on their vehicles. He said stereos had been stolen in the past. [REDACTED] said there was no other damage to the vehicles. He said the estimated damage would be about $1,200.00 for both vehicles.

I spoke to [REDACTED] said he was showing a customer some vehicles on the lot (January 17th around 1200 hours) when the customer noticed the letters "ELF" on the passenger's side door of the red Ford truck. [REDACTED] said he then noticed the same letters "ELF" scratched on the other vehicle, a green Ford truck. [REDACTED] said he does not know of anyone who could have damaged the vehicles.

I was unable to determine what object was used to scratch the vehicles. The letters were about twelve inches in height and about six inches wide.

[REDACTED] said someone had spray painted graffiti on the northwest wall of the auto shop. [REDACTED] said it would cost about $100.00 to paint the wall.

I looked at the wall and it stated, "By the way I pissed on this corner." The letters were sprayed with blue paint. [REDACTED] said he does not know when someone sprayed graffiti on the wall.

There is nothing to directly link the two incidents together.

Title: SEIZING THUNDER

Synopsis: Report activity of individual(s) indexed in captioned investigation.

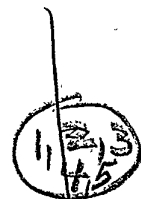

Enclosure(s): Police Reports, photos.

Details: On Friday, 05/06/2005, at 7:45 p.m., a Hanford Patrolman stationed at the Yakima Barricade observed an older two-tone brown and tan Suburban-type vehicle with Oregon plates parked outside the gate. A bearded white male and a white female wearing a cowboy hat were seated in the vehicle. The female had a video camera and appeared to be video taping the barricade and the immediate area. When the Patrolman exited the barricade facility to make contact, they immediately left the area. Due to weather conditions, the Patrolman was not able to observe the license number.

On Saturday, 05/07/2005, at 12:54 p.m., Patrolman [REDACTED]

[REDACTED] observed three individuals in a brown Chevrolet Suburban, Oregon license [REDACTED] that were at Gate 35-T, beyond which is restricted to the public. When Patrolman [REDACTED] approached, they parked the vehicle near the gate and the male driver and a female passenger in the backseat passenger exited the vehicle. In response to a question of what they were doing, the female passenger (later identified as [REDACTED]) answered they were taping FTF. She explained that a person at the University of Oregon had hired them to make this video.

[] also showed [] what she said was a Geiger counter and said that the area had very good air quality and very little radiation readings. [] stated she had contacted the Department of Energy and the Nuclear Regulatory Commission prior to making the trip to Hanford. She could not provide a point of contact for either. After [] inquired about the staffing at the 400 area, and the driver (who later identified himself as [] asked how many security personnel were assigned to the area, [] advised them the conversation was ended and they were not to go beyond any of the gates or fences.

Patrolman [] called the Patrol Operations Center to report the contact. As he did so, the three started to leave the area. Lt. [] directed [] to stop the vehicle for security and identification purposes. When he approached the vehicle he noticed it was very dirty and full of junk. He asked for their identification and got it from [] and the third passenger, a white female named []. [] the driver, said he had left his identification back at the hotel. A few minutes later, Patrolman [] arrived on scene.

While waiting for a Benton County Sheriff Officer to arrive at the scene, [] asked if they had been at the Yakima Barricade the previous evening. [] stated they had been. [] continued to be talkative as far as what she did for a living. She was very, very anti-nuke, saying how society needed to learn to live with nature. She said [] was her mechanic and the Group Tech. [] said they had been to West Richland a couple of hours before and met [] volunteered to show them around the area in exchange for a ride in [] canoe. [] was just with them for the day and was in no way affiliated with [] organization. In addition to FTF, it was [] understanding that they had filmed the Columbia Generating Plant. [] talked about having maps for the site and knowing where materials might be. She also talked about visiting a plant in Texas.

After about an hour, [] were directed by Lt. [] to conduct a search of the vehicle for prohibited articles. The search produced a questionable knife and several bottles of beer. Later, Benton County Sheriff Deputy [] arrived with Hanford Patrolman [] a K-9 dog handler. Another search was conducted of the vehicle with the help of the dog, producing nothing more than the knife and beer. Deputy [] placed [] under arrest for operating a motor vehicle without a license. Judge Pratt
